英文を読んであとの問いに答えなさい。

Nakamura Tetsu was a doctor. He loved mountain climbing and collecting 【 あ 】, so he went to Pakistan to find some rare butterflies in 1978. On the way, he met many people suffering from serious diseases. But there were not enough 【 い 】 or medicines. When he went back to Japan, he made preparations to work there. In 1984, he started working at a hospital in *Peshawar, Pakistan. Also in 1991, he built a clinic in Afghanistan.

There is a saying, “① In Afghanistan, *one can live without money, but not without snow.” Snow on the mountains melts into rivers in summer and gives water to the land. Most of the people are farmers, and water is essential. Because of climate change, the mountains have 【 う 】 snow and the fields have dried up. The *drought in 2000 was especially terrible. A million people *starved to death. Many Afghans had to leave their villages and became *refugees.

At that time, Dr. Nakamura was helping people as a doctor. He found that people's diseases came from lack of clean water. He and his staff decided to dig *wells as fast as possible, and as many as possible. They did not have any professional skills, but they dug 120 wells with the local people in three weeks. With help from many people, 1,600 wells were dug in six years. Dr. Nakamura also realized *canals were necessary for farming, and he used a traditional Japanese technique to build them. Even today the local people can maintain them easily with natural materials. He often said, “Agricultural canals are more important than 100 clinics.” Now the villagers can live and work toward the future.

How was Dr. Nakamura able to do such a great thing? Of course, he was a wonderful person with passion. However, that is not all. From the beginning, he created an organization, and people in Japan are still supporting his activities. Many Japanese volunteers have been working with people in Afghanistan. Though he died in 2019, his passion has been passed down to many people in the area and Japan. In 2020 a picture book for children was published in Afghanistan and Japan. Even today, Dr. Nakamura is lighting up people's lives.
